GLA University Mathura,

The year 2020-2021 has seen most unprecedented events that this century has ever witnessed. The covid-19 pandemic has altogether halted life as a whole and had a significant impact on all the day to day chores of academics, as well as other industrial and corporate sectors. But a good thing that happened after a great chaos and confusion was that mankind learnt new ways to adapt to this new normal so as to combat the infection as well as manage the day to day chores. GLA University is playing a pivoting role in the research and development of the Research Scholars. We scholars from GLA University also tried to device and suggest different solutions and perspectives to combat the infection as well as manage the daily chores by reviewing various health related ethical dilemmas. And thereby we came upon this Supplementary issue on Covid-19 along with the editorial team of JK-Practitioner. The special issue is based on quality and scientific review papers on the impact of Covid-19 on public health management. This issue consists of five major sections in which the scope of research is wide and extended to develop research with updated scientific, medical, technological practices such as drug trials and developments from modern and traditional approaches. Further, the medical ethics point of view aims to manage the public health ethically such as the cancer care management. The recent technological practices in medicine and public health management like the use of Nanotechnology, Artificial Intelligence, Machine Learning, the Internet of Things and Big Data Analysis are in their scope review that adds value to public health management.
